THE SCORE

BEING A CLOWN IS NO LAUGHING MATTER

An amusement park is a place of happiness, a carefree escape from the daily grind. But if your life is spent making sure other people have fun, then having fun is the daily grind.

Along with a grind like that imagine doing it in pancake makeup or as the back end of a horse and you'll see why the laughter of children gets old pretty fast.

Now top all that off with a boss who doesn't give a rat's ass for the craft of clowning and zero job security, because sure as shit, if an investigation into that incident doesn't close the park, then any day now some developer's going bulldoze it to make way for 500 self-storage units so a group of assholes can delay the inconvenience of having to throw away their fucking beany baby collections.

It's bad enough being a clown without being a cliché too, but sometimes you just can't hold in the tears, and to a little punk, the only thing funnier than your tears of impotent rage is the look on your face after they've just punched you in the balls.

MOVIE NIGHT

Vulgar, The Prestige, Shakes the Clown, Baskets (TV Series).

SPECIAL TREATMENT

Every clown needs a name and a unique makeup style. In fact, once a clown has chosen a name and makeup these are registered in a clown registry by painting it onto an egg. When inspiration strikes you, give your character a name and draw their makeup on a copy of the template at the end of the playset.

Clown troops have a natural pecking order with the Whiteface clown the leader of the troop. He or she is portrayed as smart and competent (for a clown) in contrast to the Auguste who is the hapless buffoon. This relationship doesn't necessarily stop when the curtain comes down...
